Uzbekistan

Uzbekistan is located in the heart of Central Asia and borders five countries. It is about the same size as Sweden or California with more than two-thirds of it desert and steppe in the west.

Uzbekistan contains some of the world's oldest, most historic cities like Samarkand and Bukhara and has an extreme continental climate. It is generally warmest in the south and coldest in the north. If you're interested in trekking, then the summer months of July and August are the best times since summers are almost always dry. In recent years Uzbekistan was notably affected by global warming.

11 percent of its territory consists of intensely cultivated, irrigated river valleys. More than 60 percent of its population lives in densely populated rural communities. Uzbekistan is the world's second-largest cotton exporter and the fifth largest producer. Other major export earners include gold, natural gas and oil.

People in Uzbekistan wear different types of clothes. In villages you will observe women wearing traditional clothes like long variegated dresses and scarves. In cities they are less traditional and more modern. Men wear pants more often than jeans. Shorts are worn rather rarely and usually only by people in the city.

Tea is a popular beverage in the finest Oriental traditions; it is the drink of hospitality. Tea is first served to guests and then to family members. Green tea is more popular in Uzbekistan than black, but black is preferred in Tashkent.
